Grant Gustin is relatively new to Hollywood, but he made his acting debut on Fox's Glee as a supporting actor.

While on the show, Gustin portrayed a ruthless, conniving villain by the name of Sebastian Smythe. His character was known for causing tension between the Warblers at the Dalton Academy. In season three he took over as lead singer of the Warblers, replacing Blaine Anderson.

The character he portrayed on this show is a far contrast to the heroic role that he plays now as The Flash.

But playing a role such as this is not huge leap for the actor.

Gustin is a diehard fan of DC Comics hero, Superman.

The actor was even pictured this past July at Comic Con in a Superman emblem t-shirt.

However, the most interesting part of all of this is his Superman tattoo.

In an interview with DC All Access, Grant doted about the tattoo stating, "When I was a kid, I was a huge Superman fan. And also really into like drawing and coloring. And I was like four or five, and so my mom use to draw him for me, Superman, and I would color that in. And that's why it's her handwriting. This was also a line in my first professional job."
